Community Engagement Workshop Discussing Future of Snow King Mountain and Base Area Postponed

Jackson, Wyo. March 8, 2018 – The Town of Jackson has announced that it will be postponing the second scheduled facilitated community discussion on the future of Snow King Mountain and the surrounding base area encompassing both public and private lands. The 2-hour interactive workshop was initially scheduled to be held Monday, March 12 between 6:00 P.M. and 8:00 P.M. in the Grand Room at Snow King Hotel. A new date and time for this meeting will be announced in the near future.

Information gathered during the initial community engagement workshop held on Monday, January 22, 2018 has been utilized by a smaller stakeholder working group to develop several potential future scenarios for Snow King Mountain and the surrounding base area. The stakeholder group has been engaged in robust conversations that have offered a variety of ideas surrounding this topic. During the most recent stakeholder meeting it was determined that additional time is needed before presenting these scenarios to the community.

“We understand that preparation is the key to success,” said Tyler Sinclair, Planning Director for the Town of Jackson and Teton County. “Before we present the stakeholder ideas to the community a little extra time and preparation is necessary. We understand there is a sense of urgency for this project; however, before coming back in front of the community we want to make sure that the stakeholder group is able to offer a complete and comprehensive body of work.”

Two additional stakeholder working group meetings have been added to the initial scheduled meetings to ensure that work is complete before presenting scenarios to the community. A rescheduled community engagement meeting to review these scenarios will be announce in the near future.

All members of the community are invited to participate in this ongoing effort by sharing their opinions and interests on the subject via email at stakeholders@jacksonwy.gov.
